40th ANNUAL EDITION

1988 marks the 40th edition of the Phillies Yearbook, the longest continuous publishing streak in the National League.

Public Relations Director Nathan (Babe) Alexander published the Phillies first Yearbook in 1949, a 40-page black-and-white issue. The only color in the book was the cover and back cover which was a Sealtest ad for Shmoo Wich, an ice cream sandwich. Sealtest had two other ads inside the covers. The book sold for 50 cents.

Editorial content included the schedule, a page of autographs, a story on the history of the team, spring training stories, articles on the broadcasters, front office, manager Eddie Sawyer, coaches, writers covering the team, the grandstand manager and a lengthy feature on the farm system. In 1949, the Phillies had 400 minor league players on minor league teams in places like Utica, NY; Bradford, PA; Wilmington, DE; Portland, ME; Terre Haute, IN; Toronto; Salina, KS; Schenectady, NY; Appleton, WI; Vandergrift, PA; Americus, GA; Carbondale, PA; Seaford, DE and Klamath Falls, OR.

The major league players? Only two, Del Ennis and Schoolboy Rowe, were treated to full pages. The other 30 players were placed three a page. Included in that group was Richie Ashburn, coming off the Rookie Of The Year.

Baseball Is His Game

Woodward Is His Name

"I've considered him to be one of the brightest and most astute young men in baseball for some time and I'm extremely pleased to have him join the Phillies organization."

Those were the comments Phillies President Bill Giles made when he introduced Woody Woodward as the team's new Vice President of Player Personnel last fall.

The 45-year-old Woodward brings a baseball background which includes ten years as a front office official in the big leagues.

He was an outstanding shortstop on the Coral Gables (Miami) High School team which won the state championship and an All-American at Florida State University.

A bonus signee with Milwaukee, Woodward played eight and one-half years with the Braves and Cincinnati Reds.

Following retirement in 1971, he was a partner in a real estate development company in Tallahassee for three years. He tried his hand as the color commentator with the Reds for 1974-75.

He returned to FSU as baseball coach in 1975. In four years, his team won 74.9 percent of its games, second best percentage in school history.

Bob Howsam and Dick Wagner, who were running the Reds, called and Woody returned to professional baseball as the minor league field coordinator. Two years later, he was assistant general manager to Wagner.

Woodward joined the Yankees after the 1984 season as Vice President, Baseball Administration, a position he held until promoted to GM in 1986.

He left the Yankees last October but three clubs called right away, Houston, Baltimore and The Phillies.

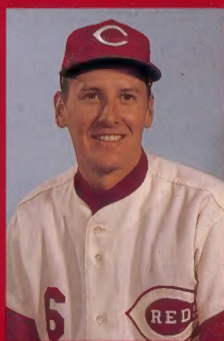

Giles and Woodward met twice.

"I wanted to see how much authority I would have in making trades," explained Woodward. "How much input I would have in player development and scouting. I really felt after the first time we met, this is where I wanted to be.

"The Phillies have always been one of the top organizations in the game. They've always done things in a first-class manner. There are a lot of good people here who work hard. You see very little turnover and that says a lot for an organization."

Woodward's job is strictly the playing end of the game... gather as much information as possible about every pro player; analyze all Phillies players; recommend and negotiate all player trades and communicate on a regular basis with other general managers regarding player personnel changes and trades.

Sounds as if he is going to spend a few minutes at the old ball park.

"More than a few minutes, sir. Rather, it will be a few minutes away from the park.

"I plan on seeing as many of our games as possible. If we have a day game and there's another game in the area that night, I'll head there. There might be times when I will skip our games because I want to become more familiar with our young prospects.

"I will see every one of our minor league clubs this summer."

Woodward will be making the deals. "Bill will be kept abreast of all moves. If the deal has a tremendous impact on the salary structure, then he has the power to veto the deal. As the owner, he is entitled to that and entitled to know everything."

During the regular season, Woodward won't be scouting other big league teams. "That's in the hands of Ray Shore, Paul Owens and Jim Davenport."

When talking trades, Woodward will use their opinions, his own knowledge and outside sources. "If I have a contact outside the organization, I will utilize that source to find out more, to supplement what our own people say. The more you know, the less chance of a mistake."

When Owens was the Phillies general manager, he kept using the word patience when making trades.

Woodward agrees with Owens' philosophy.

"No doubt about it, you have to have patience above everything else. If you're not, you'll move too quickly and there's more of a chance of error. There's always a chance of making mistakes but if you are patient, the chances are reduced."

His first trade with the Phillies was the Phil Bradley-Glenn Wilson five-player deal. His patience was tested right away. "We had five weeks of serious discussions with Seattle and longer if you consider the early discussions I had in late October."

One area he won't miss is the area of player negotiations, contracts and the like.

"I'm so fortunate in having Tony Siegle," said Woodward.

"He has earned the respect around baseball as a person who knows the rules. It is becoming more and more important. I'm like most GMs. We don't like that end. It's such a pleasure not having to deal in those areas and in having Tony. He enjoys it because he knows he's good at it."

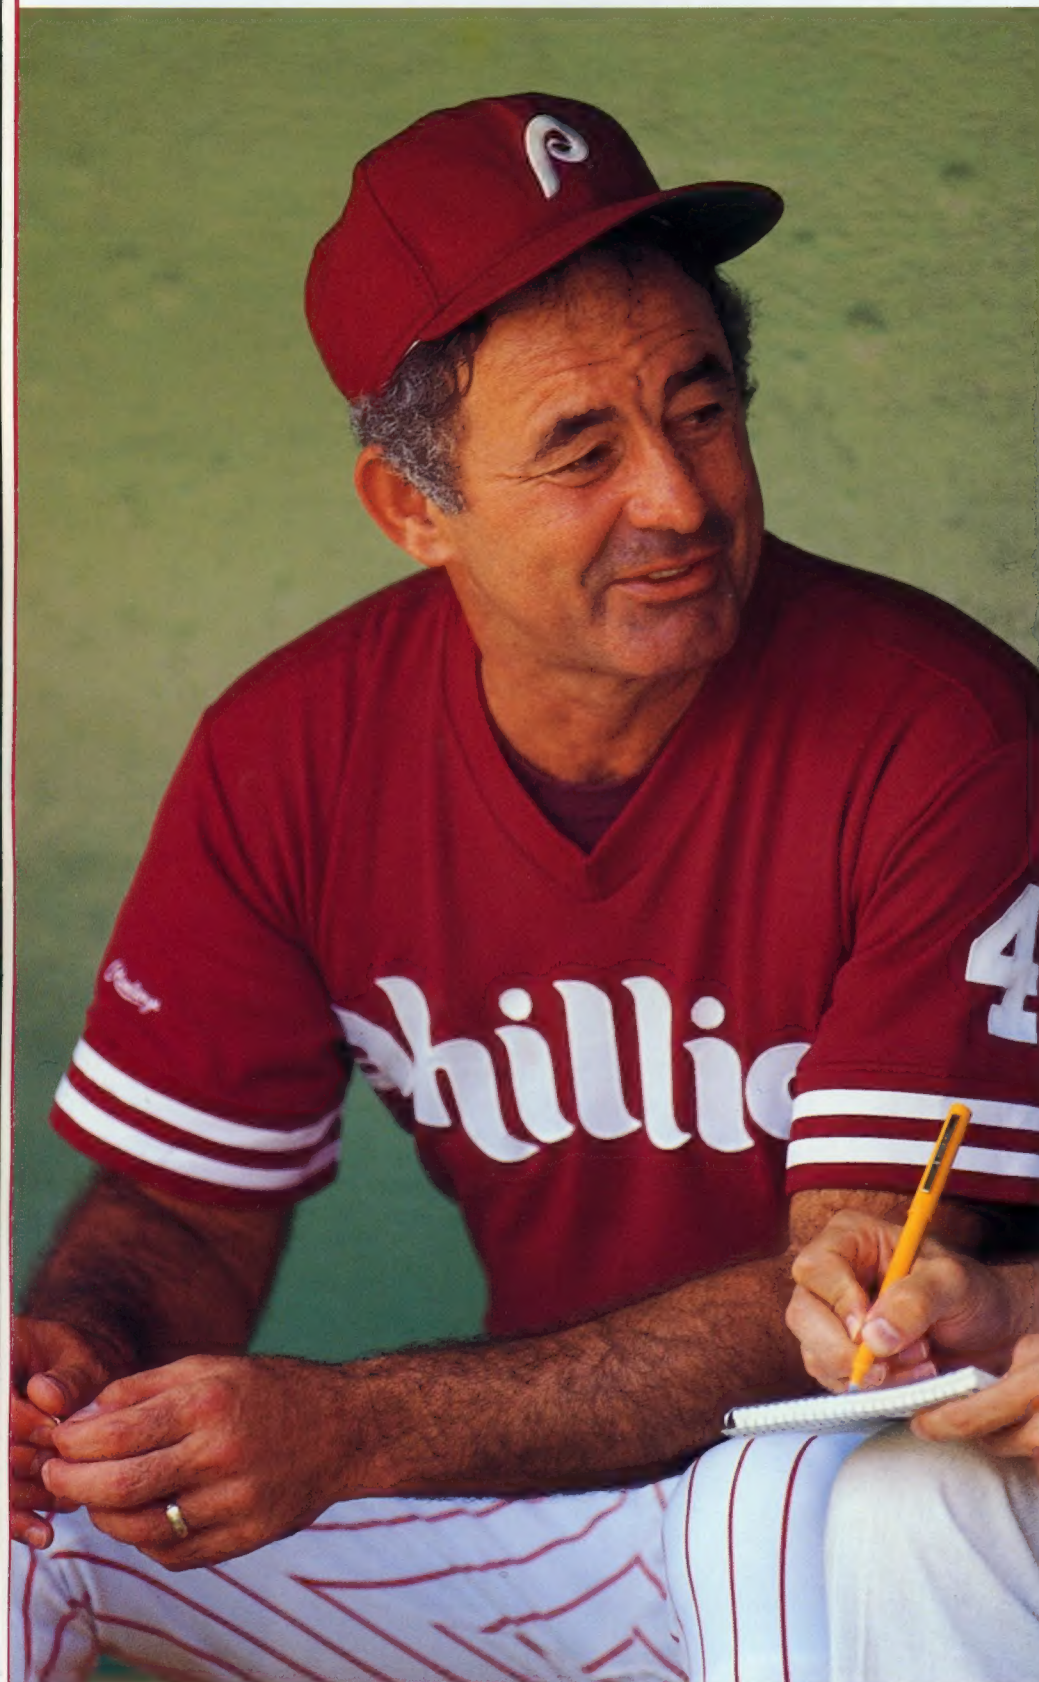

Woodward's last year with the Yankees was mostly tied to his stadium office. "I'm going to enjoy this year, an opportunity to get out and see minor league games. In this particular job, there's no substitution for seeing first hand."

So, he's getting his traveling gear together... suitcase, credit cards, airline guide, motel guide and his scorebook (That's my way of scouting -- keeping score, making notations and then keeping that information on file").

As a fan, you might not get to see Woodward and his scorebook at the Vet. But, he'll be in Reading, Old Orchard Beach, Clearwater, Spartanburg, Batavia and Martinsville. He'll be behind home plate busily making notes.

A Dream Come True

Lee Elia personifies the City of Philadelphia where he was born and reared and the town he truly loves. Elia is a city kid from top to bottom, tough and street smart, a nose-in-your-face kind of man who will back down from nobody. Yet, a man who possesses the sensitivity that makes his intense eyes moisten simply at the mention of an old friend who sent his regards.

He is still regarded as one of the great school boy athletes in the history of Philadelphia, a three-sport star who went from Olney High School to the University of Delaware.

In his first year for the Blue Hens, he led the freshman team in scoring, passing and rushing yardage while doubling as a punter. Scotty Duncan, his coach then, called him "the finest athlete I've ever seen." A freak injury resulting in a hip dislocation ended his football career the following spring.

Elia turned to professional baseball, signing with the Phillies. He managed to play briefly in the major leagues for the Cubs and White Sox before managing and coaching in the Phillies organization from 1975 until he got the Cubs top job in 1982.

Now he holds a dream come true-- completing the long climb from the streets of Philadelphia to the job of managing his hometown team.

The 50-year-old is ecstatic about having the job and he's going to do it his way. "I'm big on the team approach to this game and I'm going to try my best to get these guys to think the same way."

Elia, who replaced John Felske last June, ran his first spring training camp for the Phillies this year in Clearwater, FL, and he left no doubts he was the boss.

He has been around the game long enough to know how important a coaching staff can be for a manager. The game has become more and more complex and a staff can be a tremendous aid for any major league manager.

Bill Giles has allowed Elia to assemble one of the few six-man staffs. And Elia plans to make good use of the opportunity to have the experience represented by Dave Bristol, Claude Osteen, Mike Ryan, Tony Taylor, Del Unser and John Vukovich.

"One of the things lacking on this ball club in recent years is enthusiasm," Elia said. "I really believe bringing in emotional people like Bristol, Taylor and Vukovich has to rub off on some of the guys."

"Plus, all six of the coaches are great baseball men who can help me in so many ways. I plan to make maximum use of their expertise."

Like almost anyone who has been through a rocky experience, Elia believes he is better equipped this second time around to be a major league manager.

"I have a bad temper and a tendency to say what I'm thinking without thinking of the consequences," he reminisced. "That's what got me in trouble in Chicago when I got so frustrated."

"Outside of one remark I made last season I think I've finally learned that I have to be more careful because anything I say can be a big story in the papers or on TV."

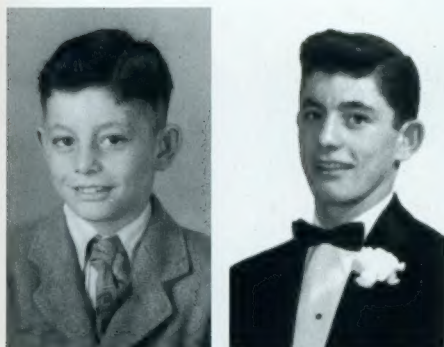

"However, I don't want people to think I'm going to turn into anything different than what got me here," says the Clearwater resident. "I want these guys to play major league baseball for the Philadelphia Phillies in the great City of Philadelphia."

The inflection in his voice indicated he meant business. Elia then shifted gears, flashed that warm smile of his and talked about his hopes for the future.

"You know the first thing I did when I got this job was make my office look more like home. I wanted photos to remind me of the great times we've had around here and how good it can be again."

"I always wanted this job and now it's mine. I can't wait to get this town excited again about the Phillies. And I plan to do just that."

PHILADELPHIA BORN MANAGERS

Lee Elia is only the third native-born Philadelphian to manage the Phillies. The other two were Bill Shettsline (managed from 1889-1902) and Jimmy Wilson (1934-38).

The Phillies Coaching Staff

DAVE BRISTOL: Bristol returns as the Phillies third base coach after a two-year hiatus from baseball. He was the Phillies third base coach from 1982-85. A former minor league infielder, Bristol managed eleven years in the major leagues with Cincinnati, Milwaukee Brewers, Atlanta and San Francisco. He is a highly respected instructor.

CLAUDE OSTEEN: Now in his seventh year as the Phillies pitching coach. Claude also has worked as pitching coach for the St. Louis Cardinals. He won 196 games in the major leagues, twice winning 20 games for the Dodgers in 1969 and 1972. Also pitched for St. Louis, Chicago(AL) and Houston.

MIKE RYAN: "Irish" begins his ninth year as a Phillies coach making him the senior member of the versatile staff. Has served mainly as bullpen coach except for most of the 1985 season when he coached first. Managed in the Pittsburgh minor league system in 1975 and 1976. Played eleven years in the majors with the Phils, Pirates and Red Sox.

TONY TAYLOR: One of the most popular Phillies of all-time, Taylor returns to the coaching staff at first base. He has been a minor league manager and instructor in the Phillies organization since retiring in 1977. Taylor was the Phillies first base coach from 1977-79. He is the Phillies all-time leader in games played at second base.

DEL UNSER: Del will serve as the Phillies hitting instructor for the fourth consecutive year. He coached first base early in 1985 and all of 1986-87. A 15-year major league player, Unser played for the Washington Senators, Indians, Mets, Expos and Phillies. He still is remembered as a hero of the 1980 Championship team.

JOHN VUKOVICH: John returns to the Phillies as dugout coach after spending the last six years with the Chicago Cubs performing a variety of duties. He played 16 years of professional baseball and saw major league service with the Phillies, Brewers and Reds. A slick fielder, he was a member of the 1980 World Champions.

A Phillie's Season's Greetings

Vin Hayes spent Christmas with some of his friends.

JOY

Donna, Jonathan, Jessica & Mike

Christmas in Clearwater with the Elias; Tana, Lee and Penny.

Mary, Andrew and Shane Rawley at home in Sarasota, Florida.

The Carmans: Sharon, Jared and Don with newborn Aaron celebrate their first Christmas in their new Cherry Hill, New Jersey home.

The Bradleys: Ramona, Curt, Phil and Megan at their home in Columbia, Missouri.

Chris, Natilee and little Alyssa James at home in Alto, Texas.

Mary, Torri, Brooke and Milt Thompson spent Christmas at their home in Ninety Six, South Carolina.

Look what Santa brought Darren Daulton at his home in Arkansas City, Kansas!

Happy Holidays

THE PARRISHS
LANCE, ARLYNE,
DAVID, MATTHEW,

Shelley and Jeff Calhoun spent Christmas in Jeff's hometown of McComb, Mississippi.

Showing off some of their Santas are the Derniers:
Vicki, Bob, Dustin and Derek.

Newlyweds Kevin and Tammy Gross with son Shane at home in Chino, California.

Gail and John Russell and newborn Brooks in their new Philadelphia home.

Juan and Mery Samuel celebrate Christmas at home in the Dominican Republic.

Beverly, Liza, John and David Palmer spent the holidays at their Stone Mountain, Georgia home.

Cy Young Award Winner Steve Bedrosian with his wife Tammy and sons Kyle and Cody.

Denny and Abigail Ruffin at home in Austin, Texas.

Greg, Debbie, Michael and Megan Gross outside their home in Malvern, PA.

First Baseman, Reliever Win Owens Award

Cy Young Awards go to the best pitchers in each of the major leagues. The Most Valuable Players get an award called just that, the MVP.

Here in Philadelphia, two outstanding minor league players in the Phillies organization annually receive the Paul Owens Award.

The Award is named in honor of the man who has spent nearly all of his baseball life with the Phillies. Owens was a minor league player, minor league manager, scout, director of the minor leagues, general manager and field manager.

As the GM, he built the powerhouse teams of the mid-1970's, a club which went on to win the first World Series crown ever for the franchise eight years ago. As a manager, he took the 1983 club to the World Series only to lose to the Baltimore Orioles.

Each of the Phillies minor league teams submit candidates for the Owens Award, one going for the best player and the other for the outstanding pitcher. The winner is chosen by the personnel in the minor league department.

Saluted last September at Veterans Stadium were Ricky Jordan, a 22-year-old first baseman and relief pitcher Todd Frohworth, a 25-year-old who throws like Kent Tekulve.

Jordan, the club's No. 1 selection in the 1983 June draft out of Sacramento, CA, had an outstanding season playing for the Reading Phillies in the Eastern League.

Along the way he set personal highs for average (.318), runs (78), hits (151), doubles (28), homers (16) and RBI (95). He finished second in the league in RBI and ranked fifth in total bases. His RBI total was the highest in the Phillies minor league system for 1987.

A right-handed hitter, Jordan struck out just 22 times in 475 at bats. The fifth-year pro has fanned only 223 times in 2,218 at bats.

"Made one of the most dramatic improvements I've seen in a long time," reported his manager, George Culver. "Joe Lefebvre (Reading hitting coach) worked with him and Ricky really put up some impressive numbers. Defensively, he's got good hands, the best I've seen at scooping throws in the dirt."

Frohworth, picked on the 13th round in the 1984 June draft out of Northwest Missouri State University, was a teammate of Jordan's twice last summer.

The Milwaukee, WI, resident began the season with Reading, and was leading the league with 16 saves when he was promoted to the Maine Guides on June 29th. He was recalled by the Phillies on August 10 and sent back to Reading 12 days later before coming back to the big leagues after the Eastern League playoffs ended in September.

Despite missing nearly two months, he still wound up leading the EL in saves (19) and won the Rolands Relief Man Award.

Culver also had glowing words for Frohworth, a 6-foot-4 right-hander: "Was very reliable and steady all season. Consistent ground ball pitcher. Good student of the game. Low-key person but a real gamer."

During the season, the Phillies also honored a player of each month. Last year's winners were:

APRIL—1B Gary Ber-
man, Clearwater Phillies . . . Hit .368 with six doubles, two homers and 16 RBI in the first month.

MAY—CF Vince Holy-field, Spartanburg Phillies . . . While his .280 average didn't seem that high, he led all Phillies minor leaguers in May with 35 hits, 22 RBI and 17 stolen bases.

JUNE—LF Steve
DeAngelis, Reading Phillies . . . Hit safely in 23 of 29 games, batting .346 with seven homers, 28 RBI. Was winner of May 1986 Award.

JULY—2B Tom Barrett,
Reading Phillies . . . Hit in 28 of 33 games compiling a .365 average. Scored 26 times and drove in 25. Had hitting streaks of eight and nine games.

AUGUST—RHP Scott
Service, Clearwater Phillies . . . Runner-up for June Award with a 5-1 record, Scott won the award this month with a 3-1 record, 1.56 ERA. His lone loss was 1-0.

Phillies Potpourri

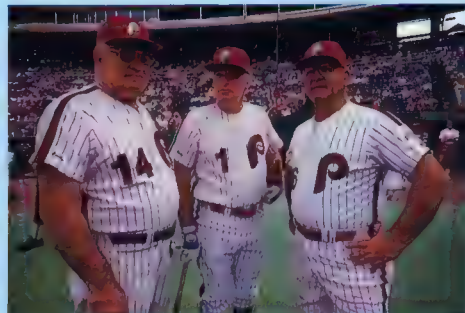

Good bye Zamboni. Yes, with the new AstroTurf-8 installed at the Vet for the 1988 season, the Zamboni will no longer be used to vacuum excess water off the playing surface as has been done since the stadium opened in 1971. The new artificial turf includes a new drainage system and water will disappear naturally, or should we say artificially. So, the Zamboni goes the way of the Edsel.

Hall of Fame third baseman Eddie Mathews (left) poses with future Hall of Famer Mike Schmidt during last year's Equitable Old-Timers Game. 1987 was a rough year for Mathews' all-time records for a third baseman. Schmidt set new marks for home runs by an NL third baseman; major league third baseman; most RBI and most extra base hits.

Mike Schmidt's uniform he wore when he hit the historic 500th home run last April is on display at the baseball Hall of Fame in Cooperstown, NY. His uniform was on display in the 1987 highlights exhibit last season and has been shifted to a special display which features other memorabilia from Schmidt, who some day will be enshrined into the Hall.

Juan Samuel gets a hug from former Phillie Granny Hamner. During the 1987 season, Samuel broke two of Hamner's Phillies records for a second baseman: home runs (21) and RBI in a season (93).

Jubilant members of the Catholic League All-Stars hoist the Carpenter Cup after winning that award last summer. The Cup is an annual single-elimination tournament involving 12 area high school all-star baseball teams. Catholic won last year's title over South Jersey-Central. Delaware (state) won the 1986 Cup named in honor of the Carpenter Family, long-time owners of the Phillies and supporters of amateur baseball in the area. This year's tournament will be held June 16-22.

The Stage Was Set

Saturday, April 18, 1987, dawned clear and crisp in the City of Pittsburgh and there was an air of anticipation surrounding the Phillies.

The night before the Phillies had beaten the Pittsburgh Pirates, 6-2, in ten innings, just their second win in ten games. And while just a simple victory after such a horrid start would have been exhilarating, the game had produced the 499th career home run of one Michael Jack Schmidt.

Thus the stage was set for Schmidt to join baseball's elite 500 homer club, a sure ticket to Cooperstown and the Hall of Fame.

On the bus to Three Rivers Stadium for the 2:15 afternoon game, I was reading the sports section of the Pittsburgh Press which featured a large photo of Schmidt hitting number 499. In a seat several rows behind me, I heard Steve Bedrosian remark: "Guys, today's the day. I can just feel it. But how can anybody hit 500 home runs?"

Kevin Gross jumped right in: "I'll tell you how. Just look at that swing (pointing to my newspaper). It's perfect and they all look the same."

During our PRISM telecast that afternoon, Andy Musser had remarked the previous night Julius Erving had scored his 30,000th point in his final home game of the regular season. He needed 35 and wound up with 38. At the time I mentioned "special people have a flair for the dramatic."

Mike Schmidt is very special and he dramatically came through just as Dr. J. had the night before.

Let's go back and relive that special moment

Trailing, 5-0, the Pirates rallied and took the lead when Johnny Ray hit a three-run homer in the last of the eighth off Bedrosian. With two out in the top of the ninth, Juan Samuel's speed saved a game-ending double play. Von Hayes drew a walk to put runners on first and second.

Up came Michael Jack. Ball one. Ball two. Ball three. He swung at the fourth pitch from Don Robinson and there it went. As soon as Andy called the historic shot, I let out a yell in the background, not too professional but what the heck, I am human.

I'll never forget Mike's emotional trip around the bases. A defeat was rescued by a special person in dramatic fashion.

I was the first person to interview him after the game. The look on Mike's face reminded me of the way he looked that October night in 1980 when the Phillies finally had put all their demons to rest and became the World Champions.

In our interview he talked about how big the home run had been for the team because the Phillies were struggling. Then he got around to putting the home run into perspective and how it would insure a place for him in baseball history.

That night Harry Kalas, Andy, our TV director Ray Tipton, and I were joined at dinner by Mike and his wife, Donna.

It was a relaxing evening with a lot of laughter and topped off another memorable day, all made possible by the incredible number 20 who has served all of us so well during his career by competing at the highest level possible.

A Record-Setting Season

Was it a dream? It seemed like the opening of a TV movie. Begin with a typically cool November afternoon in Georgia. Then a long 40-mile drive to a crowded Atlanta airport followed by a seemingly never-ending wait in the Delta Crown room checking the clock and waiting for the phone to ring. Will the call come before the plane takes off? Does he get on the airplane or doesn't he?

The wait ended shortly after 4:30 p.m., November 11, 1987, for Steve Bedrosian. The phone rang and he was informed by Baseball Writers Association of America Secretary Jack Lang that he indeed was The National League Cy Young Award winner!

"Bedrock" hardly had time to celebrate. He had just a few minutes to say goodbye to his wife, Tammy, and board the airplane bound for Philadelphia where scores of reporters would be waiting at Veterans Stadium for a press conference.

"It's really exciting and a privilege to be honored this way," the 6-foot-3 reliever told a room full of Philadelphia area media. "It's the ultimate honor for an individual and I'll never forget it as long as I live." But for Bedrosian there is one thing he cherishes even more. "The thing I'd like most is to be in a World Series right here in Philadelphia."

A year ago, someone could have made a lot of money if they would have bet Bedrosian would be the 1987 National League Cy Young Award winner. But no one, including Bedrosian himself, and especially those who criticized the trade which brought him to Philadelphia two years ago, gave it much consideration.

One week into the season, Bedrosian resembled anyone but Cy Young with a 12.28 ERA. But a slight adjustment in his mechanics after working with pitching coach Claude Osteen got Bedrock back in top form. From that point on he compiled a 2.01 ERA and set save records along the way making him a strong candidate for the award.

Steve proudly displays the Cy Young Award. It's the fourth time this decade a Phillies pitcher has won the prestigious award. Bedrosian joins Steve Carlton (twice) and John Denny.

He became the first Phillie to ever lead the league in saves with a club-record 40, only the sixth time in history a reliever has reached the 40 mark. The right-hander set a major league record with 13 straight saves (from May 25-June 30), breaking Sparky Lyle's mark.

It's tough to imagine where the Phillies would have been without Bedrosian, who had a hand in 45 of the team's 80 victories — that's 45 percent, tops in the major leagues. All of that was in spite of missing 11 games in late August with an impingement in his right shoulder.

When the ballots were counted Bedrosian emerged as the winner, just two points more than Chicago's Rick Sutcliffe. It was the closest vote since the award's inception in 1956. And the Cy Young wasn't the only trophy added to his collection. Bedrosian also walked away with the Rolands Relief Man Award and Sporting News Fireman of the Year to name a couple.

Life has changed a little for the Methuen, Massachusetts, native. He spent the winter attending banquets, making appearances and turning others down. People have come out of the woodwork to ask for favors and autographs. But the man Harry Kalas calls "The Rock" is determined not to get caught up in all the notoriety that comes with winning a major award.

"Winning the award won't change me," he said. "I won't get big-headed or cocky. A lot of times people receive awards like this and then they fall apart the next year. When you're at the top, a lot of guys want to knock you off your perch. I know the hitters will be gunning for me, so I want to work hard and put the award behind me."

"Let's hope Bedrosian has another dream season in 1988. Only this year his dream will include the entire team and no one will wake up until another World Series Trophy is presented to the Phillies.

In A Pinch, Nobody Is Better

If you are a Mike Schmidt, a Von Hayes or a Juan Samuel, you know when you walk in the Phillies clubhouse door, you are going to be in the lineup and will get four or five at bats.

For a guy like Greg Gross, it is different. Chances are he will be on the bench again following the National Anthem. Instead of four or five AB's, he might get one.

Gross is a premier pinch hitter, the game's best these days. Sure, there are times when he will get a start and get his four or five AB's. It helps you keep sharp.

"It's much like Steve Bedrosian says, you don't like long stretches without action," explains the 14-year veteran.

"Dallas Green and Paul Owens were great at how they used me. Lee (Elia) is doing the same thing."

The results have paid off. In the nine years Gross has been with the Phillies, he has led them in pinch hits seven times. He's already the team's all-time leader in pinch hits and every hit he gets puts more space between him and Tony Taylor, who's in second place 51 behind.

Even more impressive are Gross' career figures. He began this season tied with Jose Morales for third place (123) on the all-time list trailing only Smoky Burgess (145) and Manny Mota (150).

No official records are kept on walks by a pinch hitter but one would guess Gross' 82 is way up there and possibly first.

What does a guy like Gross do during a game?

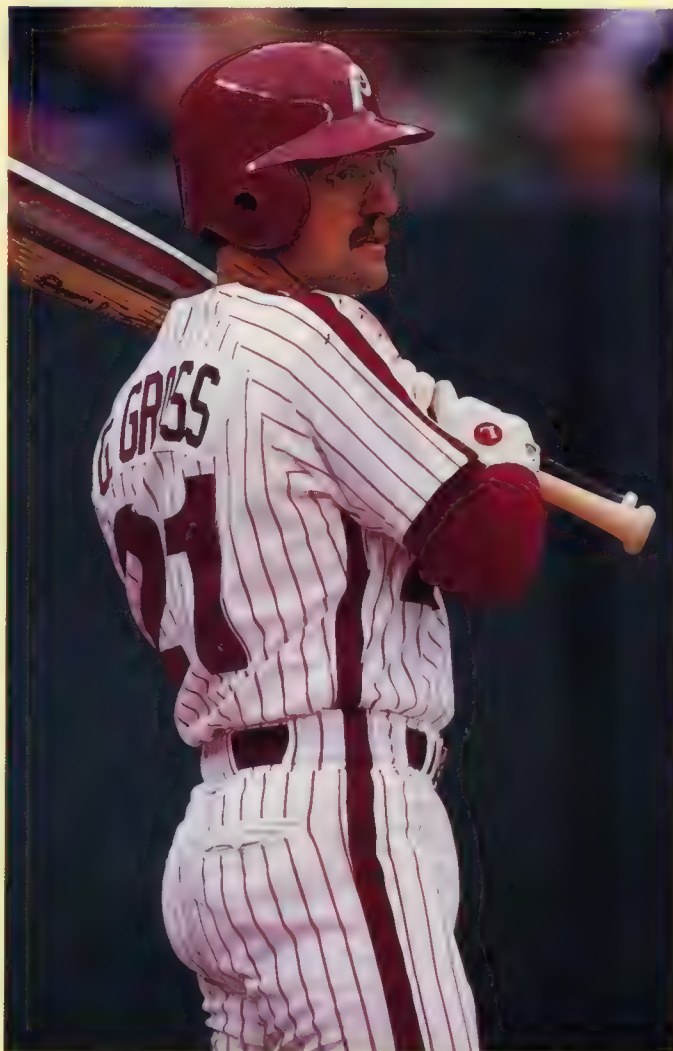

"I stretch out every other inning early in the game and move around as much as possible. I don't like to sit in one place too long. There aren't too many clubs who have good left-handers in the pen so I know I'll get called on when those right-handers come in.

"I also know I'm not going to hit very often before the seventh inning. If the game is tied or we are down a run, I'll usually hit. If we are up a run, it might take longer . . . like until tomorrow.

"Generally, I'm not used in RBI situations. I've been on clubs with some good RBI pinch hitters, guys like Del Unser, George Vukovich, Joe Lefebvre and Ron Roenicke."

Okay, but now it is the sixth inning. What's next?

"In the top of that inning, I go to the laundry room next to the clubhouse where I'll hit off a batting tee. When that half inning ends, it's back to the dugout. I never want him (Elia) to look for me. Rule No. 1 for a pinch hitter: Hang near the manager" said Gross with a smile.

As Gross already mentioned, his job is to get on base, get something going or keep an inning alive.

His key?

"I've been lucky because I have a good eye at the plate. I know the strike zone, how to work the count in my favor and most of the time I know the pitcher, what he throws and how he will pitch me."

That ability has produced over and over and now he's chasing an all-time record.

"I never really thought about any record until I got past 100. If I have a few normal years, the record is very attainable. But, I don't want to get out of how I approach it. I don't want to be trying for nothing but hits to get on base."

He'll turn 36 in August but he's not your normal person for that age. As with all modern day athletes, conditioning is a key part of the daily life.

This off-season Gross began learning the printing business for Waldman Graphics of Pennsauken, N.J. "Got to start thinking about career number two," he explained.

To make sure career one didn't suffer, Gross got up at five o'clock every morning to continue his daily workouts.

"How long I play depends upon a number of things," he said. "A lot depends on how well the team does and how well I do. If the team is not playing well, my type of player isn't of great value to the club. The club could opt for younger players and not want veterans on the bench.

"Actually, I really want to play into the next decade and hit another home run. Then I could say I hit home runs in three decades," he laughed.

Smoky Burgess

Catcher with 18 years in the big leagues: Cubs, Phillies (1952-55), Reds, Pirates and ending with White Sox in 1967

. . . Left-handed hitter . . . Career pinch hitting average was .286 (145-507) . . . Lifetime average was higher, .295, for 1,718 games . . . Best years came with White Sox, 20 pinch hits in 1965 and 21 the following year . . . A scouting supervisor with the Atlanta Braves.

Manny Mota (150)

Outfielder who played in major leagues for 19 years . . .

Played with Giants, Pirates, Expos and Dodgers . . . Right-handed hitter . . . As a pinch hitter, had a career average of .299 (150-501) . . . For his total career, .304 for 1,536 games . . . Broke Smoky Burgess' all-time record PH record (145) in 1979 at age 41 . . . First base coach and hitting instructor for Los Angeles Dodgers.

THE RICHIE ASHBURN STORY

Speed was his forte but there was a point in his life when he might not have been able to walk.

"He" is Richie Ashburn, a speed comet who burnt upon the Philadelphia baseball scene in 1948 as the National League's Rookie Of The Year. Four decades later, he is still going strong.

Following a 15-year career as a player, Ashburn has put in 25 years as a Phillies broadcaster.

"Whitey" grew up in Tilden, a tiny town in the Northeast corner of Nebraska, 150 miles west of Omaha. Neil and "Toots" Ashburn ("her name is Genevieve but they call her Toots") were the parents of two children, Baby and Baby, when Toots moved 61 years ago this month.

Donny and Richie.

Well, ... he's called Rich. "Twins Christened Don Richard," explained Whitey. "My sister is Dennis Ruff. We were almost named George and Georgiana. Oddly enough, there was a mistake on my birth certificate. It just says Rich Ashburn. That's all."

Don Richard, Rich, Richie, Whitey or whatever, this youngster loved to play sports. He could do one thing better than most kids ... let 'em run. "There wasn't much else to do," laughed Richie.

An eventual brilliant baseball career was nearly wiped out by a nasty knee infection.

"When I was about seven or eight years old, I almost lost my left leg. I got an infection in that knee from a cut. I went swimming and it really got bad. There were the days before penicillin and sulfa drugs and those kind of things. Our regular doctor wasn't in town at the time. There were only two doctors. The one was considered an excellent doctor and the other kind of a quack.

Richie Ashburn

Tawny-maned stranger who streaked across the big league scene a year ago like some wayward comet, Richie is playing his sophomore season. A youth who stirred the nation's headlines throughout all of 1948, the twinkle-toed visitor from Nebraska led both leagues in stolen bases with a total of 32, batted with the leading five hitters all year and finished second only to Stan Musial for the batting title with a mark of .333. Meanwhile, the Cornhusker Express hung up an early season string of hitting in 23 straight games, had old-timers comparing his speed and daring on the bases with that of the immortal Ty Cobb. At the end of the pennant race, when he was out of action with a fractured finger, Richie was named by The Sporting News as Rookie of the Year.

—The Sporting News

"Well, the quack told my dad they were going to have to cut the leg off to save my life. My dad said, 'No, we're going to wait until old Doc Barn got back in town.'"

"We waited, and Doc finally came back. He said it might have to be cut off but we're going to see what we can do. Through poultices and those kind of things, the leg finally came around.

"I could not run like a deer."

There was only one person who could give him a run for his money ... sister Dunning.

"We used to run races in country fairs for prize money. Either she or I would win. She didn't always beat me but there were times when she did."

A 1952 issue of BASEBALL LIFE STORIES reported: Richie actually used to race jackrabbits. Richie laughed.

"No, somebody wrote one time I used to run up along side jackrabbits and touch them to see if they were tender."

While in high school, Ashburn began to play organized baseball. He was a catcher who could run. He also played American Legion ball and began to attract the attention of major league scouts.

As a kid, he was a Cub fan, sort of, because "they were the only team you could get on the radio. There with no intention. My favorite player I guess was Stan Hack, the third baseman. I remember one time going to Chicago to work out with the Cubs. I was sitting when this veteran grumbled, 'Hey, Ash, get out of the cage and let the hitters hit.' It was Stan Hack."

Indians Fined

Cleveland tried signing Ashburn when he was only 16 but Baseball Commissioner Judge Kenesaw Landis fined the Indians $500 for tampering with a high school boy. Offers came from the Cubs, Yankees and Cardinals but he eventually signed with the Phillies for $3,500.

"I signed with the Phillies because of Eddie Klapnick, who was their midwest scout at the time I believe. He was a wonderful man and I had been worked over a bit by some other scouts, tied to, deceived," added Ashburn.

Richie went from Tilden to Utica where he met a man very influential in his career: Eddie Sawyer, the manager, who would later manage the Phillies. He hit .312 and caught the entire year. Ashburn spent the following year (1946) in the military service and came back to Utica in 1947 (.262).

It was that season that Sawyer moved him to the outfield.

"He didn't have the greatest arm in the world and he argued with the pitchers all the time. In order to have a pitching staff, I moved him to the outfield. He began in left but with that speed, I could see he would make a great center fielder," recalled Sawyer.

"Richie had the greatest desire that I ever saw in a ballplayer."

Ashburn showed up in Clearwater in 1948. Harry Walker, the center fielder who won the batting title the year before, was a holdout. Charlie Gilbert, another center fielder, got hurt in spring training and the club didn't have anyone to play center.

"The first big league game I ever saw I played in, against the Boston Braves at Connie Mack Stadium. My first major league hit was a single off Johnny Sain."

Ashburn stayed here for 12 years, hitting 300 eight times. As a rookie, he hit 333, second to Stan Musial, and was elected the starter in the All-Star Game.

Ashburn was one of the many outstanding prospects to reach the majors from the Phillies farm system. . . . Robin Roberts, Curt Simmons, Granny Hamner, Andy Seminick, Willie Jones and Del Ennis.

The "Whiz Kids", as they were called, captured the city like no other team in Phillies history by winning the 1950 National League pennant.

Greatest Throw Ever

Ashburn could hit, run and catch the ball but his throw on the last day of the season ranks as the biggest defensive play in Phillies history.

Tied, 1-1, at Brooklyn in the last of the ninth, the Dodgers had the winning run on second base and Duke Snider coming to the plate.

"The winning run was on second base. I knew Duke couldn't bunt so I shortened up a step or two. He hit a sharp, one hop single to me. It came right at me and was a routine play for an outfielder at a crucial time."

The runner (Cal Abrams) was out and Dick Sisler gave Philadelphia the pennant with a historic three run homer in the top of the 10th.

"Winning that pennant didn't sink in for two days," says Ashburn. "It was a big thrill but a big disappointment to lose the World Series in four to the Yankees."

The expected dynasty by the Whiz Kids didn't materialize. One by one the players were traded as the years began to pass by. Ashburn continued to pile up the hits. He won batting titles in 1955 (.338) and 1958 (.350). Finally, after the 1959 season, he was dealt to the Cubs for Alvin Dark, Jim Woods and John Buzhardt.

Expansion came along and Ashburn was selected by the New York Mets. He hit .306 playing for Casey Stengel and was the Mets' MVP. But, it was a long season, a record 120 losses.

The season and his career, as it turned out, ended in unusual style in Wrigley Field. "Sammy Drake got on base and I singled off Bob Buhl. I believe he was pitching. Joe Pignatano came up. He hit a soft liner to right center. The play was in front of me and I took off as did Drake."

"Kenny Hubbs, who died a year later in a plane crash, caught the ball. I didn't think he had a chance but he made a great play for the first out. Drake was doubled off second for the second out and I was tripled off first for the last out and the end of the season."

Ashburn then heard his final speech from a manager.

"Casey wanted us to feel better. I guess and he said 'Fellers', that's what he called us, 'Fellers, I don't want you to feel bad about this. This has been a team effort. No one or two players could have done all this.'"

Time To Retire

Ashburn retired after that season. "If I'd been playing for a better team, I probably would have tried to play for a couple more years."

Les Quailey, who was in charge of the media for N. W. Ayer, Atlantic Refining Company's advertising agency, called Ashburn and asked if he was interested in joining the Phillies broadcasting team. Frank Sims was leaving and Quailey was looking for another person to go along with By Saam and Bill Campbell.

Ashburn turned it down and appeared headed for a political career.

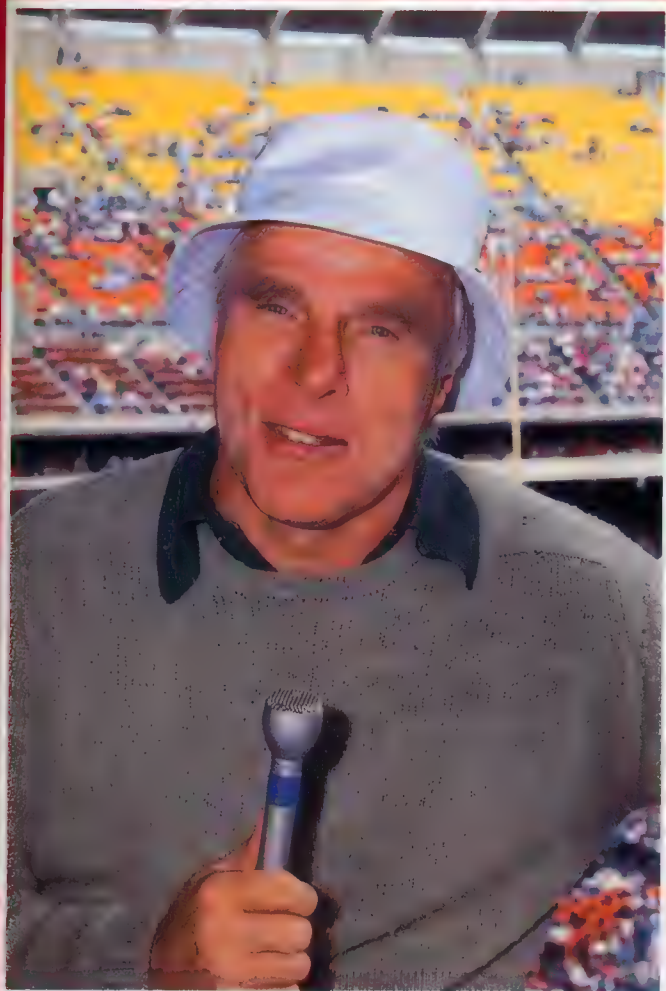

"I was told I was to run in the Republican primary for third district Congressman in Nebraska. There was a problem for me in that I would be running against a person who was one of my best friends. I didn't have a good feeling running against him so I didn't."

Quailey called again. "He said, 'You have a few months until spring training, think about it and we'll talk again.' Finally, I said why not. I was offered a good contract by the Mets to come back but I decided definitely to retire."

Ashburn got the job over, according to some sources, Bobby Thompson, Roy Smalley and Virgil Trucks. "I had heard about Thompson and Trucks but I hadn't heard Smalley's name."

"I had no previous announcing experience, zero," says Ashburn. "It was certainly harder than I thought it would be. You have to develop a style, a flow. Timing is important. You don't want to interfere with the play on the play-by-play announcer. Ben Quiley and Campbell told me early if you don't have anything to say, shut up."

Asen had been broadcasting for years and admits it was an adjustment, having a radio man. "It was hard for me at first. Campbell did better. It took me a while longer but I finally adjusted."

"Richie is different from other broadcasters," says Campbell. "I detect the tension among announcers today. Richie stands out because he's different. He's never been a privacy. There's nothing contrived about him. That's what appeals to me."

Part of Ashburn's appeal is his funny expressions, "Oh, brother" and "But the home run." Or, talking about his old girl friends in Nebraska, Myra Mae Hauge or Daisabel Hark.

"It's not only his expertise. He has a waveless sense of humor," says Harry Kolko. "He's a funny guy and a real joy to be around. Only Richie can get away with some of the things he says."

As a player and a broadcaster, Ashburn has entertained millions of Phillies fans. He came from a little town, the biggest celebrity to come out of Tilden, and wound up as the most popular sports figure in the big city of Philadelphia.

All that's left is a place in another little town, Cooperstown, NY, home of the baseball Hall of Fame.

A CAREER TO REMEMBER

Richie Ashburn played 15 years in the big leagues (1948-1962) and compiled a .308 average. He played in 2,189 games and collected 2,574 hits plus 1,198 walks as one of the game's best lead-off hitters.

With the Phillies, Ashburn hit .311 for 12 years, eighth on the club's all-time list. He has more singles (1,811) and hits (2,217) than any other player in their history, although Mike Schmidt began this season 110 behind in base hits.

Here's a capsule summary of his outstanding career:

OFFENSE

- ★ NL batting champion twice (finished in top five, four other times).
- ★ NL leader, singles, four times (tied NL record).
- ★ NL leader, walks, four times.
- ★ NL leader, on-base percentage, four times.
- ★ NL leader, hits, three times.
- ★ NL leader, triples, twice.
- ★ Averaged 171 hits and 79 walks per year.

DEFENSE

- ★ NL leader, assists, three times.
- ★ Shares Major League record: Most Years Leading League, Putouts, nine.
- ★ Holds ML record: Most Years, 400 or More Putouts, nine.
- ★ Holds ML record: Most Years, 500 or More Putouts, four.
- ★ Ranks fifth all-time, most putouts, behind Willie Mays, Tris Speaker, Max Carey and Ty Cobb.
- ★ NL leader in chances per game, outfielder, from 1948-1958, except 1955 when he finished second.
- ★ Averaged 405.9 putouts, 11.8 assists, 7.3 errors per year.

BASE RUNNING

- ★ NL leader, stolen bases, once (last Phillie to lead)
- ★ From 1946 through 1960, led all NL players in stolen bases.
- ★ Averaged 15.6 steals per year.

DURABILITY

- ★ During Phillies career, he played in 97 percent of his team's games.
- ★ Was on disabled list only twice.
- ★ Played in 731 consecutive games, 91 short of the then NL record held by Gus Suhr.

MISCELLANEOUS

- ★ Five-time All-Star.
- ★ He and Rogers Hornsby are the only NL players to lead league in average, hits and walks in same season in modern times.
- ★ Batted over .300 in nine seasons.
- ★ Had on-base percentage of .400 or better, six times.
- ★ Last player to bat .300 in his final season.
- ★ One of only 37 retired players to have a lifetime average over .300 and collect more than 2,500 hits. Among 35 20th-century players in this group, he is the ONLY one not in the Hall of Fame.

Can They Repeat?

Division play began in 1969. Only once in the National League has a team won three straight division titles. That honor belonged to the Pittsburgh Pirates, champs of 1970-71-72.

The Phillies were coming off two straight years of 101 wins and NL East titles. Each time they missed making the World Series.

Could Danny Ozark's club make it three in a row? Would there be a letdown from failing two years in a row? Would the Pirates catch the Phillies?

When the final game of the 1978 season was over, the answers were yes, no, no.

The Phillies won 90 games and their third straight title. The Pirates almost caught the Phillies. Once again, the Phillies lost the League Championship Series, bowing in four games for the second straight year to the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Getting to the LCS wasn't easy.

Despite tying the club record for April wins with 10, the Phillies didn't see the top of the division until June 10. The next day they fell from first. A doubleheader win over the Cubs on June 23 put the Phillies on top again, by a slim .002 margin. Ozark's Phillies never saw second place again the rest of the season.

During back-to-back weekends in August, they met the Pirates eight times. Philadelphia won six. In that streak, they saw their biggest lead, 11½ games, on August 12.

Winning 20 of 22, the Pirates cut that lead to one-half game on September 5. A season-ending series in Pittsburgh looked as if it would decide the entire season.

That's exactly what happened.

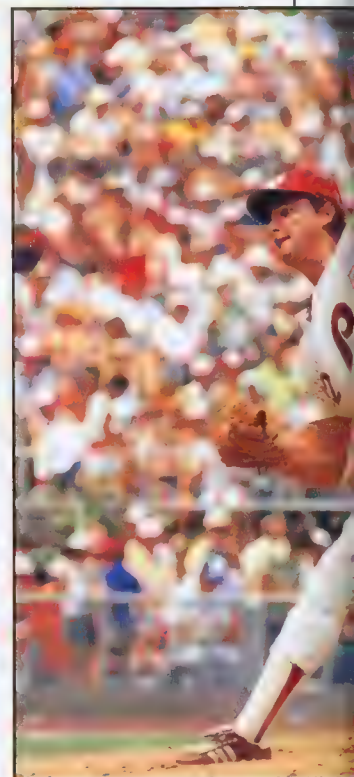

Leading by three and one-half with four games left, all in Three Rivers Stadium, the Pirates made Phillies fans squirm. The Bucs won a pair on a Friday night, beating Steve Carlton and Dick Ruthven, Ozark's best pitchers.

It was now a one and a half-game pad with two to go. Randy Lerch was on the mound and things got tighter when Willie Stargell hit a grand slam in the first inning, 4-1. Lerch wasn't fazed. He led the comeback with two home runs. Greg Luzinski's three-run homer and a three-run double by Richie Hebner put the Phils on top, 10-4. The Bucs rallied for four in the ninth but reliever Ron Reed fanned Stargell and got Phil Garner on a grounder. The celebration was on.

Losing the first two games of the LCS in Philadelphia to the Dodgers, Carlton drove in four runs in game #3 to make the series 2-1. In game four, the Phillies loaded the bases with no outs in the first inning but didn't score.

The Dodgers made a second straight appearance in the World Series by winning in the tenth when Garry Maddox, a four-time Gold Glove outfielder, dropped Dusty Baker's two-out fly ball and Bill Russell singled in the winning run.

"The Phillies did not lose this game because of Maddox," said

Mike Schmidt in a very quiet clubhouse. "We lost because we put ourselves in a vulnerable position from the outset."

Looking back at the season:

- Larry Bowa led the Phillies in hitting while making only 10 errors. He finished behind Steve Garvey and Dave Parker in the MVP race.
- Carlton was again the workhorse despite missing several starts because of shoulder bursitis. He led the staff in wins. Included was his 200th on July 23rd.
- General manager Paul Owens swung two mid-season trades picking up two pitchers, Dick Ruthven and Rawly Eastwick. Ruthven was instrumental in the drive to the pennant, going 13-5 after coming over from Atlanta for Gene Garber.
- The 36-year-old Reed was the ace reliever, picking up 17 saves, six in September.
- For the first time ever, the Phillies had four Gold Glove winners, Bowa, Maddox, Schmidt and Bob Boone.
- Luzinski led the club in homers and RBI and topped all NL players in voting for the All-Star Game.
- As a team, the Phillies set a club record for fewest errors, 104.
- They stole 152 bases, their highest total since 1912.
- Veterans such as Bud Harrelson and Jose Cardenal were valuable.
- Jerry Martin led the team with three pinch homers.
- Ted Sizemore missed six weeks with a broken left hand and Jim Morrison filled in. Schmidt (hamstring) and Bake McBride (sprained wrist) each missed nearly a month with injuries.
- Phillie Phanatic made his debut.
- For the second straight year, the Phillies ranked second in the league in attendance, drawing over 2.5 million.
- The 25th man on the LCS roster was Orlando Gonzalez, a great trivia quiz subject.

The friendly calendar on our walls today says it is 1988. Time marches on but memories linger forever.

The History of the Philadelphia

In the 19th Century

The Phillies joined the National League in 1883, only six years after the league was formed. Evidence of early Philly uniforms is indeed sparse but team photos from the 1890's show the abbreviated city name PHILA on the shirt fronts of some versions (possibly road uniforms) and either an Old English or standard capital P on others. Oddly, after the turn of the century the team uniforms never again displayed the city name—not even on road uniforms. The block capital P did, however, become a standard feature for several decades into the 1900's.

The Early 1900's

For almost the entire decade of 1900-1910, both home and road uniforms displayed the squared capital P on the left breast of the jerseys. Sketchy evidence suggests that the trim colors used during this decade were at times BLACK, RED, or MAROON. The P itself varied slightly in size and at times was without serifs.

Home uniforms were always white (featuring a dark fold-down collar around 1900) with a standard buttoned front and turned-down regular collar. Traveling uniforms were the standard gray with similar trim features.

Cap styles around 1901-2 were the "pill-box" style, either solid dark or with horizontal striping. From 1903-5 the white home caps had the close-fitting, round crown with piping down the crown seams and a trim stripe around the base of the crown. The road caps were solid dark with white piping emanating from the top button.

In 1909, the capital P was removed from the shirt front and displayed on the left sleeve of both home whites and road grays.

The 1888 edition of the Philadelphia Phillies

The caps were solid dark (presumably black) and with a higher, fuller crown.

The Grover Alexander Years

The 1910 home and road uniforms were a distinct departure from previous seasons. The fold-down collar was nearly out of fashion by now and was replaced by the newly popular "cadet" style. The new collar style was accented in solid red as were the sleeve ends and the sides of the trousers.

On the home whites the block capital P was replaced by an ornate Old English style and on the road grays the simple block P was modified to a more rounded style. Wide striping was introduced for the first time on the stockings. The white home cap reverted to the standard round crown with a red visor and piping down the crown seams. The road cap for 1910 was solid gray.

In 1911, a rookie pitcher from Nebraska named Grover Cleveland Alexander won 28 games and had the league buzzing. The Phillie uniforms in Alex's first year were revised again and restored the standard squared capital P to the left shirt front on both home and road suits. A capital P was introduced to the plain caps and a single wide stripe about halfway down was featured on the stockings.

Trim color according to newspaper accounts was SCARLET or MAUVE (or maybe somewhere in between—perhaps a burgundy shade?). This uniform look survived through most of the decade with little revision (seam stripes added to the caps 1913). Paced by the phenomenal pitching of Alexander, the club finally captured a pennant in 1915 in these uniforms.

The Dreadful Decade of the Twenties

The Phillies had plunged into the league cellar in 1919 and began a painfully long era of permanent residency in the second division.

In 1921, the uniforms reflected the first significant redesign in a decade. The "cadet" collar was replaced by the now popular "V-neck" style—almost collarless with a brief tapered extension around the back of the neck. Pinstripes were introduced on both home whites and road grays. The familiar P on the left breast was now enclosed in a circle. Both home and road caps were the plain standard solid dark (BLACK or NAVY). The stockings were solid dark with two bands of maroon around the calf.

For 1923, the circle around the P was dropped and the letter P enlarged to its earlier size. A small capital P was restored on the front of the caps. The stockings were now half white (or gray) from the calf down to the ankle.

The year 1925 marked the 50th anniversary of the National League and all teams observed the occasion by wearing a large circular blue and gold patch either on the shirt front or on the sleeve. The Phils opted for the left sleeve, as did most of the clubs. The uniforms for 1925 resurrected a version of the Old English style P on the shirt front and cap.

By 1927, the P on the road grays was transplanted to the sleeve and was enclosed in a heavy diamond shape. The stockings by this time featured a simple wide band of red and caps had a red visor to complement the white or gray crown. This general trim theme persisted in the early years of the next decade.

Depression and New Color Schemes

The Phillies entered the decade of the thirties still mired in the second division. About the only relief was to cheer the slugging feats of future hall of famer Chuck Klein. As was the practice then, black arm bands were worn on the left sleeve of the uniform during 1931 to commemorate the death of owner William F. Baker.

For the 1933 season, the Phillies broke with long-standing tradition by introducing a slanted, full-script PHILLIES on their gray road uniforms for that year. Detroit had begun the practice in 1930 and the Cubs used it on their 1932 alternate road uniforms. It was just one of many new innovations in major league uniforms in that period but it was the beginning of a new pattern for Phillie uniforms in future decades.

A new wave of more colorful uniform ideas was sweeping the major league scene and the Phillies jumped on the bandwagon.

The following season (1934) they revamped their uniform look by mixing red, white and blue trim in contrast to the plain red trim of previous seasons. The script PHILLIES was embellished with an underline flourish and was now included on the shirts of the home uniforms. The home and road caps were now solid navy with a red script P outlined in white. This general design scheme (with some minor modifications) was continued through the 1937 season.

For the 1938 season, the red, white and blue color trim was temporarily set aside for a combination of GOLD and ROYAL BLUE. The script PHILLIES was replaced on the home jerseys with a large block capital P in blue and gold. The block P was repeated in gold and white on the solid blue caps. The PHILLIES script on the pearl gray road jerseys was slightly re-styled and done in blue and gold. Stockings were solid royal blue. A circular blue and gold club insignia was placed on the left sleeve of both home and road uniforms.

The year 1938 was also the end of the road for Baker Bowl as the Phils entered a joint tenancy agreement with the Athletics at Shibe Park.

In 1939, the uniforms retained the same general graphics but reverted back to the red, white and blue color scheme. The uniforms remained basically unchanged through the 1941 season.

WWII and the Erstwhile Blue Jays

By World War II (perhaps weary with the perennial losers image of two decades) it was decided that the Philadelphia National League Club was to be re-christened BLUE JAYS. For whatever reason, the new nickname failed to catch on (a similar fate for the Boston BEES) —nor was it ever implemented into the uniform graphics except for a brief appearance of a blue jay symbol on the sleeve. In fact, the name PHILLIES (or even PHILS) was displayed on the uniforms even while the new nickname was supposedly official.

The 1942 road uniform dropped the red trim and went back to the basics—gray with navy blue trim. In place of script, the name PHILS in arched block capital letters was displayed on the shirt front.

The austere look of solid navy trim was continued in 1943 with a new version of the script PHILLIES on both home and road suits. For 1944-45, the plain image was spruced up somewhat with some extra piping and stars added to dot the "i's" in PHILLIES. Ironically, the only bright spot on these drab uniforms was the small patriotic shield which all major league clubs displayed on their sleeves during the war.

The Coming of the Whiz Kids

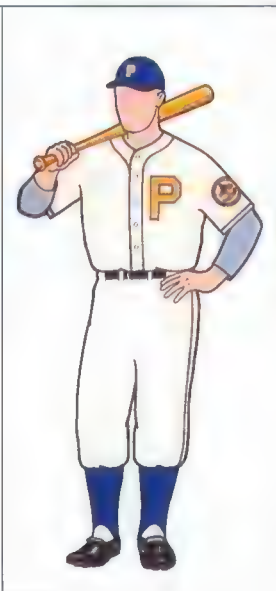

The post-war era was a rebirth of hope for the Phils, as a bumper crop of new talent appeared on the scene—Del Ennis, Richie Ashburn, Robin Roberts, and Curt Simmons, to mention a few.

The new uniforms for 1946 were a rebirth of the red, white and blue of the thirties and then some. Starting with the two-tone caps—a blue crown with red visor and a red script P with white outline—down to the red, white and blue striped stockings, it was a colorful dress-up of the plain uniform of the war years. Rich red and blue piping replaced the thin navy blue and even the belt tunnels were dressed up in red and blue. This colorful uniform scheme remained for the next three seasons and symbolized the resurgence of the Phillies as a legitimate pennant contender.

1950 is a memorable year for Phillie fandom—finally securing a National League pennant after a 35-year drought. These were the fabled "Whiz Kids" who caught the fancy of baseball fans nationwide.

As if to anticipate a milestone season, the team uniforms were another totally new look. Gone were all traces of the familiar navy blue and RED was the new dominant color. Solid red caps, stockings and undersweaters plus daring red pinstripes on the home whites—this was the new look of the fifties.

This uniform set remained the standard not only for the fifties but through the sixties as well. Despite its association with the success of 1950, it is also the uniform of the infamous collapse of 1964. By the end of the decade, it was time for a brand new stadium and a totally new uniform design to go with it.

Goodbye Shibe Park, Hello Veterans Stadium

For 1970, it was a brand new beginning for baseball in Philadelphia.

The fans bid adieu to historic Connie Mack Stadium (nee Shibe Park) and entered the modern era of artificial turf and pillarless seats.

The new uniforms also had the look of the future—a stylized new "P" logo, modern numerals, striping all the way up the sides (to the armpits) and a deeper burgundy shade of red for the trim color and pinstriping. It was basically a rejection of the traditional with the hope of planting the seeds of a new tradition for future generations.

Even the conventional gray of the road uniform soon gave way to a more trendy bluish shade—a symptom of the color TV age.

Except for a brief disastrous experiment with an all-burgundy edition in 1979, the new graphics have been accepted and in deed praised since their 1970 introduction.

A world series victory in 1980 and another pennant in 1983 plus several divisional titles along the way have helped to solidify the popularity of the "new" traditional look. A major re-design is not likely in the immediate future.

The Phillie Phanatic

HT: 6 feet; WT: 300 pounds, mostly fat
AGE: made debut on April 25, 1978
BIRTHPLACE: unknown
EYES: white eyeballs, black pupils, purple eyelashes and blue eyebrows
SKIN: Bright green fur
PHYSICAL DEFECTS: Overweight, clumsy feet, extra long beak, curled-up red tongue, gawking neck, slight case of body odor.

It's hard to believe, but Phillie Phanatic, one of baseball's most entertaining mascots, celebrates birthday number 10 in 1988. He, she or it was created out of one of the weekly staff meetings of the Phillies marketing department after the 1977 season. It was named after the fanatical Phillies fans.

The person in the costume is David Raymond, 32, a graduate of Newark (DE) High School and the University of Delaware (1979), BA degree in physical education. In his nine years, Raymond has missed just four games, April 1987 when he was hospitalized with pneumonia.

There are some old faces and new faces in the 1988 lineup of Phillies minor league teams.

The new "kids on the block" are Batavia, NY and Martinsville, VA. Both are summer leagues meaning their seasons run from mid-June to early September. Batavia is in the Class A New York-Penn League and Martinsville is in the Appalachian Rookie League.

For the second straight year, the Phillies triple-A team will be in Old Orchard Beach, ME. They will be known as the Maine Phillies. Starting in 1989, this franchise is expected to move to the Scranton area.

A new stadium is under construction and should be ready next spring for the Scranton-Wilkes-Barre Red Barons.

Rounding out the 1988 lineup:

--Clearwater, FL, the fourth year the Phillies have had a team in the Florida State League.

--Reading, PA. This season marks the 22nd consecutive year in Reading. The Phillies moved their AA franchise from Macon, GA, to Reading in 1967.

--Spartanburg, SC. The "old man" of the organization. 1988 is the 26th year of operation in this city.
